As we start discussing pocket pairs below Jacks, most of the time you will need to 0 play them for set value. This is especially true if any of your opponents show strength pre flop. Notice that 0 I said most of the time. Somewhere between 5% and 10% of the time I raise with small pocket pairs 0 in order to vary my play.

This is very important so your opponents can't put you on a hand. The first 0 decision to make is if you are even going to play smaller pocket pairs. It depends a great deal on 0 the make up of your opponents and the action at the table. If many pots are getting capped pre flop, 0 or a few players are entering every pot with a raise, you need to decide if it is worth playing 0 for two or more bets before limping into the pot.

Early Position

TT can be a tricky hand 0 to play from early position. Even when the flop doesn't contain any cards higher than your Tens, and this doesn't 0 happen as often as you would like, many players will call a bet with over cards hoping to hit one 0 of them on the turn. The other possibility, especially in a no limit game, is one of your opponents could 0 be slow playing AA KK QQ or JJ, or hit a smaller set. When this happens, you will lose a 0 big pot. Keep this in mind, and even though it may be hard to do, you will have to fold 0 pocket Tens at times even when there are no over cards on the flop. I do not recommend calling large 0 bets in this situation.

Middle Position

In situations where it is correct to fold with TT in early position, you can sometimes 0 enter the pot in middle position.

This is particularly true when your remaining opponents tend to limp instead of raise 0 when they enter the pot. I still play TT for set value for the most part, but also am able 0 to pick up the pot when the flop doesn't hit anyone by betting. Though I don't recommend betting all of 0 the time that you miss the flop, if you don't bet, the only way you can win the pot is 0 when you show down the best hand.

Late Position

Late

position is the best place to enter the pot with a raise, 0 especially when none of your opponents have shown aggression. You can of course win the pot pre flop, but even 0 if you don't you will often be able to see the turn or river for free, as most players will 0 check to you because you have shown strength pre flop.

Blind Play

The blinds are the place that I never raise with 0 TT. Therefore, I am always playing it for set value from the blinds. The reasons for this are that when 0 I hit a set my opponents will have no way of putting me on a set, and I am getting 0 a discounted look at the flop, improving my pot odds considerably.
