If you are a stressed parent, you are not alone. According to a new general survey of the surgeon published on Wednesday, parents have been more likely to report high levels of stress during the last decade than adults without children (or children).

"The work of parenthood is essential not only for the health of children, but also for society", writes the general surgeon of the USA Dr Vivek Murthy. He is himself a father with 47 years and two children: "We know that parents are directly linked to the well-being of the child".

According to the survey, parents are overburdened and also spend a large amount of hours on sports betting beginners. "As demands from both work and childcare reach the cost of time, the qualitative time for a partner: sleep or parental leisure", says the survey.

The report addresses the mental health of 63 million parents of children in the USA and also its implications for the well-being of these children. "Mental Health Parental can influence the emotional climate, the capacity for responsibility in the home; sports betting beginners; all of them are crucial for the cognitive or psychological development of the child", says a document published by the Guardian magazine that states: "Children with mental health problems can face increased risks including symptoms such as depression/anxiety (and) early onset (and) recurrence [recidivism]".

A 2024 survey of adults from the American Psychological Association discovered that 33% of parents reported high levels of stress, sports betting beginners compared to 20% of other adults. Almost half of the mothers interviewed reported stress as crushing on most days compared to 26% of other people and 65% said they were alone - 10 percentage points higher for those without children.

Among the main stress factors for parents are financial concerns, concern about the safety of children and anxiety about the time that was missing from work. "Almost 70% of parents say it is more difficult than when mothers were 20 years younger", says a report from the University of New York (USA).

Proposed solutions include changes in public policy and personal behaviors. The report pressures the government to make reforms, including greater access to paid family leave or mental health programs; in addition, it also recommends reform in the workplace: for example, the formation of "stress management" teams in harmony between professional (work-life balance) and "access to mental health services with high quality".

In 2024, Murthy published a notice calling for an end to the "epidemic", and described ways for individuals to seek support. In the same way, the report of the general surgeon on mental health of parents also encourages parents to find social support; talk freely with friends about the tension that is being a parent (or a mother)...
